Kolping 88th Street
Annual Christmas Party &
St. Nikolaus Day Celebration
Sunday, December 6, 2015

The day will begin with Fr. Richard Bretone celebrating mass at 10:30 am and immediately after our new members ceremony will take place.

During the course of the day we will also be honoring all those that have reached their NY Catholic Kolping Society membership milestones: Peter Buchholz, Bud Gramer, Marion Ulrich and Christine Weltner will be honored for their 25 year membership. And we congratulate our 65 year member Norbert Dengler. We hope they will all be able to join us to celebrate this great honor.

Our NY Kolping Society members of the year will be announced and they will receive a distinguished service award plaque.

We are so pleased that Wolfgang Hahn and Giovanni will be cooking our holiday feast. They are planning a delicious menu of chicken with mushrooms, roasted pork, mashed potatoes, sauerkraut, lots of vegetables, and the wurst salad that everyone looks forward to. There will be holiday cookies and cake for dessert, along with coffee and tea. The cost is $16 per adult and $8.00 per child under 12.

Plan a great holiday family event at the Kolping House and visit with your old friends, make new friends and enjoy lots of Christmas carols. St. Nick will be there with toys for children under 10. Traditional German holiday specialties including stollen, cookies and brandy beans will be available for purchase.

Please call or email your reservation to Jan Kessler at 914.462.7649 or jkessny@aol.com.

Be sure to let us know how many children under the age of 10 will be attending so that St. Nick has a special gift for them all.

Wishing everyone a Merry Christmas and a happy & healthy New Year!

NY KOLPING 2015 ADVENT PROJECT
Advent begins Sunday, November 29th. This year all donations received will go to the Franciscan Missionary Sisters of the Sacred Heart located in Peekskill, NY.

The international Congregation of the Franciscan Missionary Sisters of the Sacred Heart was founded in 1861 on the border of the Austrian Alps by French noblewoman, Laura Leroux, Duchess of Beaufrémont, and a humble Franciscan Friar, Father Gregory Fioravanti of Rome. Our Order quickly developed a reputation for fine teaching.

In Gratitude, a Blessed Past, a Promised Future. The Franciscan Missionary Sisters of the Sacred Heart invite you to join in their Anniversary Celebrations as they begin their Year of Jubilee, commemorating the 150th Anniversary of the arrival of our first three Sisters in America.

Much more information is available on their website www.fmscusa.org and on facebook. They are trying to raise money for a new boiler for the chapel and hotwater tank for the main house along with many other needs. Please send your donations to Catholic Kolping Society, ATT: Jan Kessler, 95 Montrose Point Road, Montrose, NY 10548.

Communion Luncheon at KOC submitted by Muriel Fullam

On November 1, 2015, All Saints Day, a beautiful Mass was celebrated at the Church of Saint Philip Neri in the Bronx. The celebrant was Fr. Arthur Welton; the Mass was said for Jack McGee, John Simons and Gloria Valender.

After Mass we proceeded to Kolping-On-Concourse where we were warmly greeted by KOC Manager, Tony Aguiluz. The KOC building looks wonderful—all bright and shiny. We especially liked the beautiful new insulated windows. Katrina Dengler said a few words to welcome us and to thank Tony and his crew, for all their good work. Alex Perez, Jose Lopez, Marco Gomez, Olvin Maldonado, Gabriela Gomez, Mercedes Perez and Elizabeth Coprio are the members of Tony’s crew. They served us a wonderful meal—lentil soup, chicken cutlets, asparagus and baked potatoes followed by ice cream tartufo for dessert. We thank them for all their work cooking, serving and cleaning up after us.

John & Ada Brauweiler, Katrina Dengler and her mother Erna Dengler, Martin Kelly, Rosemarie Lambot and some friends, Franziska Schmitt & friend, Klaus Wolters, The Fisters, Linda Ahrens, Bob & Ann Hemsing, Bernie & Christine Preisser, John & Betty Reitter and a surprise visit from former KOC manager Jorge Paris who came with some friends were just some of the members who attended this wonderful luncheon.
The German Language Club cadets at West Point had been a big help with the Kolping clean up this past spring. Captain Charles Brown emailed Lou Colletti to see if they could be any help in demolishing the playground at Kolping-on-Hudson. Unfortunately that project had been completed (but they have already offered to help with the clean up next spring)!

They also mentioned that they were planning to visit Yorkville on Saturday, November 7. The cadets were interested to find out more about Kolping 88th Street, and were hoping to get a tour of the Kolping House library/community room, ballroom, dining room and Ratskeller. They were excited to hear about the history of the house and its German heritage. Geovanny was a great & gracious host, and gave them a tour & beverages.

They are planning on making the St. Nicholas Party, so we hope to see them there!
Stories of Interest

This is an article from THE TABLET, 27 August 2005. I found it in my archives thought it would be of interest. Enjoy! – Ingrid

HUGH O'SHAUGHNESSY

A family affair

Kolping began humbly as a haven for poor Catholic workers in Cologne. Now it is worldwide network valued by travellers of all kinds.

ONE HAS to be careful where one stays in Bogotá these days. The daily death toll in the country as a whole is horrific and government forces – in overt alliance with the paramilitaries, the right-wing terror groups who earn enormous sums from drugs – are not to be trusted. On the left, the guerrillas, themselves expert in the narcotics business, have little compunction in killing innocent people.

"Where should I put up?" I asked my friend Amanda, who works for an organisation linked to the Quakers, on the afternoon I arrived in the Colombian capital. "Oh, we put everyone in the Kolping and we have our meetings there when people come from outside Bogotá," she replied.

The Kolping turned out to be a big modern house in the lower-middle-class quarter of Teusaquillo where I was made thoroughly at home and given a pleasant, clean room equipped with a television set, a washbasin and loo and a good view over the cloud-covered mountains. One small room was set aside as a chapel and there was a crucifix in every room. On several mornings when I came down to breakfast, I met country people in the dining room who were clearly unfamiliar with Bogotá – and indeed with hotels. There were visitors to Colombia from foreign non-governmental organisations and ordinary members of the Colombian public who shared my distaste for paying for hotel owners' marble and chromium fittings. At no point was I asked for a membership card, whether I was a Catholic or if I was in any way linked to Kolping. Men, women and couples were all equally welcome.

The house turned out to belong to an international Catholic network based in Germany which is active in many regions; I had been totally ignorant of it and indeed it is not well known in the English-speaking world. Subsequently, whenever I have found myself staying in a town which has one I have stayed with Kolping. If it can look after me in Bogotá, I felt, it can look after me anywhere, a principle which has made my visits to German-speaking countries and Latin America more rewarding than they otherwise would have been.

Kolping charges are very modest, and some premises are merely unbelievable, but the eighteenth-century house in the German city of Trier, where I stayed with my wife, has some architectural pretensions and was once the home of an aristocratic family.

The network was the idea of Adolph Kolping, the fourth son of a shepherd, who was born in 1813 near the German city of Cologne. He left school at 13 to become an apprentice cobbler, following his trade from city to city as his articles demanded. After 10 years of that he decided to go back to school and become a priest. After studies in Munich and Bonn he was ordained in his native city in 1845 and was sent to the industrial parish of Wuppertal in the Ruhr.

By then the industrial revolution in Germany was breaking down a system under which apprentices lived with the families of their masters, a way of life that was hard on the young men. More and more people were forced on to the road as journeymen and later as commercial travellers or travelling salesmen. In 1846, a teacher, Johann Gregor Breuer, started a young craftsmen's self-help group which was an inspiration to the priest. Three years later Kolping started the Cologne Association of Young Craftsmen with seven members. The idea caught fire throughout Germany and neighbouring countries, stoked by Kolping's constant journeying and writing, activities that were seen by some at the time as not respectable occupations for a man of the cloth.

Yet by the time of his death in Cologne in 1865 there were 420 branches or "families" in Europe and North America. Some offered training and savings schemes, health insurance schemes and cooperative stores to members of what continued to be a self-help society. All offered help for those, members or not, who were seeking ways of living a more Christian life. The development showed its worth as industrialisation proceeded and country people emigrating to the cities found something of a "home from home." When Kolping was beatified in 1991 John Paul II declared him a pioneer of the ideas contained in Rerum Novarum, Leo XIII's encyclical that deals with protecting the rights of the individual, and John Paul’s Centesimus Annus, which marked its hundredth anniversary.

As what had originally been an association of lay people took shape, Kolping decided that each unit should be headed by a priest, although today deacons may also take the responsibility. The Kolping movement was always conscious that it was a Catholic social organisation seeking to anchor its members into family life rather than a political group.

As one leading figure of Kolping says a little primly today: "Since Kolping was not one of the 'social reformers' who with a pre-established social Christian programme wanted to mend social relations, he was safe from the errors that they committed and from their dependence on the State ... modern efforts to make parishes into 'parish communities with family characteristics' can be seen as a correct sort of application of the concept that Kolping had worked out for his association."

Today Kolping claims 450,000 members in 5,000 Kolping families in 53 countries. It defines itself as "a community of solidarity in which the members and Kolping families support and promote each other". In Africa, Asia, Latin America and central and eastern Europe they are "self-help groups helping people to solve their daily problems", and are clearly part of the German Church's effort to reach out to the world's poorer countries. Kolping was certainly active when the Pope went to Cologne this month and organised a youth parliament during the world gathering for youth.

Yet membership is not demanded of those who avail themselves of the facilities for travellers which Kolping offers. These often include arrangements for small conferences and conventions. In some places there is space for long-term student accommodation. It could be argued that Kolping is a rival of some VCA, although it feels friendlier and more openly committed to Christian life.

The website (www.kolping.net) in English, German and Spanish has full details of the organisation and where it operates. In Europe there are particularly big networks in Germany and Hungary, while elsewhere houses are spread from Albania and Bosnia-Hercegovina to Poland and from Portugal to the Czech Republic. In Latin America, apart from Colombia, there are establishments in Bolivia, Chile, Ecuador, Mexico, Peru and Uruguay. In Africa, Kolping operates in Nigeria, Kenya, Tanzania, South Africa and Uganda. Some of the houses and conference centres are not to be found in the capitals or main cities.

For visitors – most of whom, I imagine, are unfamiliar with the organisation – Kolping is appreciated for the simple welcome and message of peace it extends to travellers. In an industry which is often preoccupied by tawdryness and conspicuous consumption, the Christian example it transmits by doing that is a powerful one. Perhaps Kolping should come to Britain.

To many people, Halloween means dressing up in a scary costume or trick-or-treating or childish pranks. To others, however, it is the time for retribution on the part of the souls in purgatory who were abused while alive.

A recent article in The New York Post suggests that the mistreatment of a Wagnerian opera star is the source of the unexplainable “rumbling and trembling” in a modish New York City apartment building, the historic Osborne Apartments, built in 1885 cater-cornered to Carnegie Hall.

Johanna Gadski was born in Anklam, Prussia on June 15, 1872. A Wagnerian musical prodigy, she made her debut at the Kroll Opera House in Berlin at the age of 17. Her career took off like the proverbial rocket, and she was in demand in continental Europe, England and America.

She debuted at the Metropolitan Opera on January 6, 1900 as Senta in Wagner’s Flying Dutchman, and she soon starred there in other Wagnerian roles, like Brunnhilde and Isolde. But she mastered major Italian roles as well. But in 1917, after years of being one of the reigning divas at the Met, her career took a sad turn.

War clouds were gathering over America as World War I entered its third year. A part of public opinion wanted America to enter the war on the side of England and France. All sorts of outlandish stories were being circulated depicting the Germans as brutal Huns. Germany’s engagement in submarine warfare, among other things, did not win it many friends.

The decisive argument against neutrality was the Zimmerman telegram, sent on January 11, 1917. It was intercepted by British intelligence, which referred it to the U. S. State Department. In it Arthur Zimmerman, the German Foreign Secretary, sounded out Mexico on her possible actions in the event that Germany and the U.S. went to war. Within three months of the publication of the telegram a special session of Congress was called and war was declared against Germany and the other Central Powers.

America was not only at war on the land, the sea, and in the air but also on the home front. Some “super-patriots” were degemanizing American culture. Some streets were renamed in such a manner as to conceal their German roots, among them Liberty Avenue, Wilson Street, and Pershing Boulevard. On the Upper East Side in New York, Lenox Hill Hospital had once been called the German Infirmary.

Great artists were given the pink slip. Why? They had been born in Germany. A glaring example was Johanna Gadski, who was fired from the Met a week after the declaration of war. From then until 1921 she lived in a kind of internal exile in New York, at the Osborne Apartments, and in New Hampshire. In 1921 she was able to resume her singing career. In 1932 the great soprano died in an automobile accident in Berlin.

Perhaps the strange noises that one occasionally hears at the Osborne are the arrhythmia of the broken heart that Johanna Gadski must have suffered simply for being a German in America during World War I.
